My Name Is...
by Sarah Kortemeier, Library Specialist, The University of Arizona Poetry Center and
Julie Lauterbach-Colby, Development Program Coordinator, The University of Arizona Poetry Center

Grade Level: High School, University, Adult
Time Frame: 1 hour
Objective: Students will use poetry as a vehicle to explore and deepen self-awareness.
Prior Knowledge and Skills: None required.
Required Materials: Recording of Roger Bonair-Agard’s “allegory of the black man at work in a synagogue”; computer with Internet access and audio/video playback capability. Recording is available on voca, the Poetry Center’s online audio/video library.

Sequence of Activities

Introduction: 5 minutes

Give students a quick introduction to voca, the Poetry Center’s online audio/video library. Ask students why listening to poems (in addition to encountering poems on the page) might be useful. Would they prefer to hear a poem, read a poem, or both? Why?

Discussion: 10 minutes

Introduce the rhetorical device of anaphora (the repetition of a phrase at the beginnings of sentences or clauses). Then tell students that they are about to hear a poem on voca, and ask them to listen for the poet’s use of anaphora, as well as any other images, allusions, or elements that stand out to them. Play Roger Bonair-Agard’s performance of “allegory of the black man at work in a synagogue” (recording on voca). Discuss the craft elements and images students noticed: how do these contribute to the overall meaning of the poem? How does Bonair-Agard’s speaker construct a personal identity in this poem? What do we do with the poem’s ambiguities? What are the speaker’s main conflicts? Why might Bonair-Agard have chosen to call this poem an “allegory?”

Writing Activity I: 10-15 minutes

Ask students to generate text in response to the following series of prompts based on “allegory of the black man at work in a synagogue”:

- List 5 things that the sounds in your name remind you of. (These may be words that rhyme with your name; things that you associate with individual sounds; or a combination.)
- Make 5 statements beginning “My name is...” You may name yourself after any person or thing you choose.
- List one sight, one sound, one taste, one smell, and one texture you remember from your childhood.
- Make 3 statements beginning “My name means...” You may use the actual etymological origins of your name; you may also make some up.
- At the top of a new sheet of paper, write the words “My name...” When I say “start,” complete this sentence and then write for 5 more minutes without stopping, writing down everything that comes into your mind, whether it makes coherent sense or not.¹

¹ This prompt is based on the Surrealist technique of automatic writing.
Writing Activity II: 20 minutes

Ask students to use the language they generated in Writing Activity I to create a draft of a poem. This poem may be formally similar to “allegory of the black man at work in a synagogue,” or it may take a form of the student’s choosing. Students may use as much or as little of the language generated in the prewriting prompts as they choose, and they may also add new language. There is no formal constraint for this assignment: students can write in any way that seems useful or interesting to them.

Closing: 10 minutes

Ask for volunteers to share their writing with the class.
